Helping the State Improve Mental Health Services

The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill
In 2007, the UNC Tomorrow Report identified one of the greatest needs facing 21st century North Carolinians: access to health care services and information.

And, the University system committed itself to “Develop an organized, University-based program or institute to assist government officials and concerned citizens improve our mental and behavioral services in the State.”

UNC-Chapel Hill’s Response

The Department of Psychiatry, in collaboration with other departments and schools, established the UNC Center for Excellence in Community Mental Health.

The mission of the Center is to address quality of care and workforce development issues in North Carolina's public mental health system by creating partnerships between existing state, academic, and community programs.

The Center grew out of our well-established Schizophrenia Treatment and Evaluation Program (STEP), a clinical program in operation since 1993.
Goals

• Treat those with psychotic disorders and other severe mental illnesses

• Train mental health professionals

What We Do

Use existing resources and private funds to advance mental health services and policy in North Carolina.

• Treat those who struggle with severe mental illness
• Train current and future service providers (best-practice)
• Partner with others to promote and provide affordable services
• Inform policy at state and local levels
• Add to our understanding of severe mental illness and through scholarly research and meaningful patient outcomes
We are unique...and already up and running, integrating UNC expertise and serving the citizens of North Carolina

We provide quality, multidisciplinary care in a community setting and use our experience on the “frontline” of mental health care to inform our training, our research, and our service to State policy makers.
